

Visiting Griffith Observatory

A Social Narrative

I am going to Griffith Observatory.

There are a few ways to get to Griffith Observatory.

The DASH bus can take me to the top of the mountain and drop me off near the Observatory.

Using a rideshare app, a driver can drop me off near the Observatory.

Some people drive their car, park down the hill or in the parking lot, and walk up to the Observatory.

Each way gets me to Griffith Observatory.
How will I get there?

When I arrive, I shall walk a few steps to the North Doors.

I may also use an accessible ramp on my left or right to enter the building.

I don't need a ticket
because Griffith Observatory is free.

If I have a question, need help,
or want a map, I may visit the Information Desk. If I entered through the North Doors, the desk will be on my right.

Griffith Observatory is a large place with four levels and many things to observe.

Sometimes it is busy and loud.
Sometimes it is quiet and calm.
Both are okay.

I can use my senses to explore the Observatory.
I might see big views, hear new sounds, touch certain exhibits, and notice the fresh air outside.

If I came to the Observatory with others, I shall be safe by staying close to them. Staff are always nearby if I need help.

I shall use a quiet voice inside.

I shall walk slowly inside and outside for safety.

As I visit, there may be a line to enter
certain spaces.
I shall wait patiently for my turn.

There are many things I can touch and buttons I can press.
Some objects should not be touched. I shall look for signs, ask my group, or ask staff if I am not sure.

The Observatory has a café where I may buy food. I may also bring food from home and have a picnic outside.

I shall not take food or drinks into the building.

During my visit, I can take a break.

I can sit and rest on the benches in a quiet area.

I can go to the bathroom when I need to. If I came with others, I just need to tell them.

There is a lot to see at Griffith Observatory. It's okay if I don't see everything. I can come back again.
